

ANTHROCON 2007

PITTSBURGH CITY GUIDE

General Statement

So you made it to Anthrocon, you've never been in Pittsburgh before, and you're hungry. Well, we've got you covered. Going to great lengths, the Pittsfurghers have worked with the Anthrocon Publications Staff to create this guide. Contained within is a listing of all the places that Downtown Pittsburgh has to offer to fill your belly.

As downtown Pittsburgh keeps strange hours, it is recommended that you call places before dropping in. At the back of this guide are a few places that are open late (typically closing between 1am and 2am) if you are hungry late in the night.

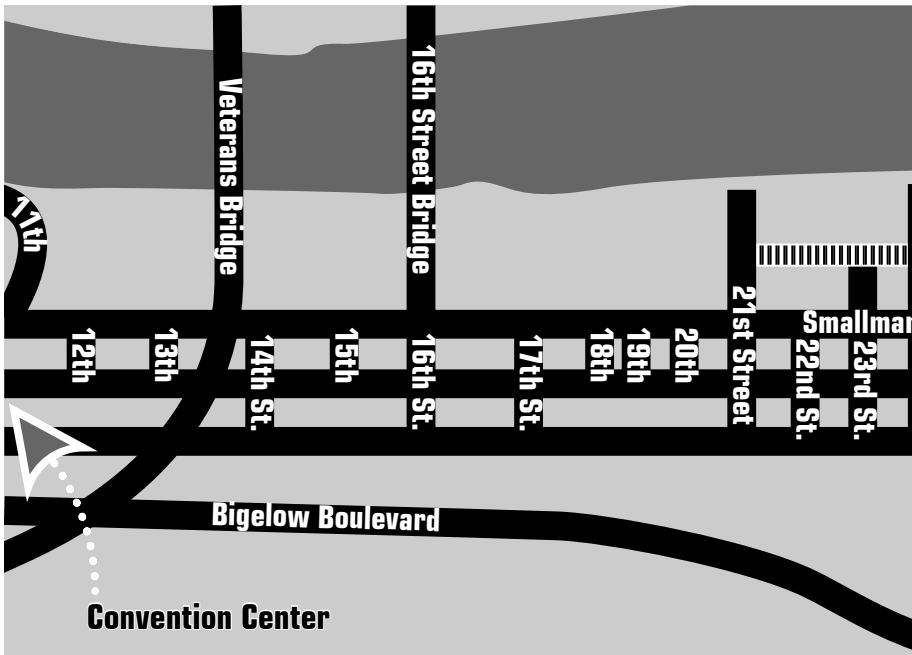

—The Pittsfurghers and the Anthrocon Publications Staff

The Strip District

One of the joys of having Anthrocon in the David Lawrence Convention Center is the close proximity to the Strip District.

To summarize this into a clear, concise argument: The Strip contains some of the best food you can get at the best prices.

The construction outside the hotel looks bad, but if you keep walking you'll enter the "Strip," which is a more au natural type of cultural district.

The Strip District (Continued)

Now, for those that miss the “interesting” food places located in Philadelphia’s Chinatown, at last count there are nine distinct Pan-Asian food stores (that includes a Korean market, a Chinese market, et cetera.) Shopping at these markets will lead to some interesting – and some outright strange – items, so enjoy!

This is by no means a definitive guide, so if you want to know what’s down there, you’re going to have to take a walk.

Now, there are a few restaurants in the Strip. The ones that we want to note are the ones at which the food is good, the prices are fair, and it is worth taking the walk to get to them. Each place is recommended by us, and Sushi Kim’s was the most recommended restaurant on the Anthrocon 2006 feedback forms:
